

B Pure Unscented

A Product Extension Proposal for Dollar Tree's B Pure Line

Full Research, Demographic Modeling & Campaign Brief

Elizabeth Caldwell
Brand Strategy & Consumer Insights
June 2026

Executive Summary

Dollar Tree’s B Pure organic cotton pad line has generated significant organic consumer enthusiasm, particularly among Black women who have praised the product publicly across TikTok, YouTube, and Lemon8, often positioning it as the most accessible alternative to premium organic brands like The Honey Pot and Rael. The product performs. Consumers love it. And they’re asking for one thing it doesn’t have yet: an unscented option.

This brief makes the case for a B Pure Unscented extension, same organic cotton formula, zero botanical infusions, reinforced wing adhesive, targeting the growing segment of consumers with fragrance sensitivities who are currently underserved at every accessible price point. It is low-risk to manufacture, high-relevance to Dollar Tree’s core demographic, and timed perfectly against a measurable trust erosion among Black women shoppers at Target following its DEI rollbacks.

The opportunity is not theoretical. The demand is documented. The market window is open now.

Section 1: Market Context

The Organic Feminine Hygiene Market

The U.S. feminine hygiene market is projected to reach $4.94 billion in 2025, growing at a compound annual rate of 4.23% through 2029. The organic and clean segment is driving the majority of that growth, fueled by rising consumer awareness around ingredient safety, vaginal health, and the documented risks of synthetic fragrances and chlorine-bleached materials in conventional pads.

What the market has not solved is the accessibility gap. The dominant organic brands occupy a premium price tier that excludes a significant portion of the consumers most motivated by health and safety concerns.

Brand	Price Per Pack	Count	Rating
Rael	$8.49	Regular pack	4.6/5 (10K+ reviews)
Cora	$10.49	Regular pack	4.2/5 (469 reviews)
The Honey Pot	$7.99–$9.99	Regular pack	4.5/5
B Pure (Dollar Tree)	$1.25	8–10 count	4.4–4.8/5

Source: Dollar Tree product listings; retailer pages for Rael, Cora, The Honey Pot (2025–2026)

The Competitive Gap

B Pure already outperforms its premium competitors on price by a factor of 6–8x. Its ratings are competitive. Its organic cotton formula is legitimate. The single differentiator that Rael and Cora hold, a broader product range with unscented options, is not a formulation advantage. It is a line extension that Dollar Tree has not yet made.

Rael’s adhesive performance is a documented vulnerability. Users on Ulta Beauty have described the wing adhesive as “flimsy,” reporting that pads shift during movement. Cora’s 4.2 rating trails Rael’s 4.6, with reviewers noting sensitivity reactions despite hypoallergenic marketing. Neither brand has solved the problem B Pure is already positioned to address: genuinely affordable, genuinely clean, genuinely accessible period care.

Section 2: Demographic Analysis

Who Is Shopping at Dollar Tree

Understanding the case for B Pure Unscented requires understanding who Dollar Tree’s customer actually is, not broadly, but specifically. The data tells a clear story.

Black consumers over-index at Dollar Tree with a visitor index of 221, meaning they are 121% more likely to shop at Dollar Tree than the average American consumer. For context, Dollar General, Dollar Tree’s closest competitor, registers a Black consumer visitor index of only 143. Dollar Tree’s urban and suburban store footprint is a primary driver of this gap.

Source: Numerator Shopper Insights

Consumer Group	Dollar Tree Visitor Index	Dollar General Visitor Index
Black / African American	221	143
Latinx / Hispanic	125	63
White / Caucasian	Not published	110

Source: Numerator Insights / Media Group Online Dollar Stores Profiler

Intersectional Demographic Modeling: Black Women as Core Shoppers

Published demographic data does not provide a single cross-tabulated figure for “Black women at Dollar Tree.” However, the figure can be derived with reasonable confidence by combining two well-documented data points:

- Black consumers represent approximately 13.6% of the U.S. population (U.S. Census). Applying Numerator’s visitor index of 2.21 produces a projected overall Black shopper share of approximately 30.1% of Dollar Tree’s customer base.
- Women account for 63.7% of all active shoppers in the dollar store channel (PMC retail behavior study / Rutgers Business Review).

Applying both figures intersectionally: $30.1\% \times 63.7\% =$ approximately 19.1% of Dollar Tree’s total active customer base is Black women.

This is a derived figure, not a published statistic, and should be presented as such. The underlying inputs are independently sourced and defensible.

Demographic Dimension	Metric	Source
Dollar store female shopper share	63.7%	PMC / Rutgers Business Review
Black consumer visitor index	221 (121% over-index)	Numerator
Derived Black women customer share	~19.1%	Intersectional model
Urban/Suburban Multicultural sales share (Family Dollar)	23% of total sales	Dollar Tree corporate data

Note: The 19.1% figure is a modeled estimate derived from two independently cited data points, not a directly published statistic.

Why This Matters for B Pure Unscented

Black women are not a target audience for Dollar Tree. They are the foundation of its customer base. They are already buying B Pure. They are already reviewing it publicly and positively. And they are the demographic most vocal about fragrance sensitivity and ingredient safety in personal care products, both because of documented health disparities and because Black women have historically led consumer-driven conversations about chemical safety in feminine hygiene.

An unscented B Pure extension does not require Dollar Tree to find a new customer. It requires them to serve the one they already have.

Section 3: The Market Moment

Target's DEI Rollbacks and the Trust Vacuum

Target's decision to roll back its DEI commitments, including the termination of its $2 billion REACH initiative and Supplier Diversity program, created measurable brand damage among the exact consumer segment that Dollar Tree over-indexes on.

The data on this is specific:

- Target's overall brand favorability dropped 9% in the immediate aftermath of the rollbacks (Collage Group Brand Trust Survey / Bloomberg Retail Report).
- Brand trust among multicultural shoppers fell 3 points from a pre-rollback rating of 82% (Collage Group).
- 30% of U.S. consumers, approximately 86 million people, reported plans to reduce spending at brands that retreated from DEI commitments (Harris Poll).
- Target experienced a 5–7% drop in store foot traffic within the first two weeks of the rollback announcement (Placer.ai).
- Target reported a 2.8% decline in overall sales and a 3.8% decline in comparable store sales in the quarters tied to the consumer backlash (Wall Street Journal).
- Target's stock price fell 12% immediately following the announcement (Reuters / WSJ Market Data).

The Up & Up Opportunity

Prior to 2023, Target's Up & Up private label anchored the accessible feminine care market for budget-conscious and multicultural consumers. It sold organic and fragrance-free pad options at $1.99–$3.49 per pack, 40–50% below national brand pricing, and held an 82% trust rating among multicultural shoppers. It was, for years, the default affordable option for consumers who wanted cleaner products without paying premium prices.

That loyalty is now in motion. The question is not whether those consumers will find an alternative. The question is whether Dollar Tree will be positioned to capture them when they do.

B Pure Unscented is that product.

Section 4: Proof of Consumer Demand

Organic Viral Momentum

B Pure's existing scented line has generated significant consumer enthusiasm with zero paid promotion. The following represents documented organic reach:

- Just_Call_Me_Tee (YouTube): Dedicated product review, 10/10 rating. Specifically cited zero skin reaction and the organic cotton formula as the primary differentiator from drugstore alternatives.
- Glam Dolls Si (TikTok / Lemon8): Positioned B Pure as the direct, accessible alternative to premium organic brands. Emphasized the $1.25 price as a breakthrough for “emergency period kits.” Approximately 50K+ views within the Dollar Tree product haul niche.
- Clean-girl wellness niche (TikTok / YouTube Shorts): Collectively over 250,000 views across budget wellness content naming B Pure as the “Honey Pot dupe.” Creators specifically praised the herbal infusion as comparable to premium botanical pads without the intense cooling sensation of name-brand alternatives.

Direct Unscented Demand, In Their Own Words

The following represents documented consumer requests for an unscented B Pure variant, pulled from platform reviews and comment threads:

Platform	Date	Paraphrased Feedback
Lemon8	May 2024	User was disappointed to find the pads were scented despite organic marketing. Warned that even natural scents cause irritation. Would only use for emergencies until an unscented version exists.
Lemon8	May 2024	Commenter reported lavender caused personal irritation and stated definitively: “unscented options are so much more soothing.”
Reddit	March 2026	User reported nausea from the lavender scent during their cycle and explicitly requested an unscented version of the product.

Category-Wide Fragrance Sensitivity Trend

The demand for unscented organic pads is not unique to B Pure. Across organic pad categories on Amazon, Reddit, and product review forums, fragrance-free formulation is consistently the most-requested product attribute among users managing vulvar sensitivity, lichen sclerosus, or contact dermatitis. Reviewers across multiple brands explicitly state they would give 5-star ratings “if a truly unscented version existed.”

Botanical infusions, including lavender and aloe, are frequently described as a “trap” for consumers with fragrance allergies, who note that natural essential oils trigger the same reactions as synthetic fragrances. The market has not solved this at an accessible price point. B Pure is positioned to.

Section 5: The Product

B Pure Unscented, Product Specification

The B Pure Unscented extension is not a new product. It is the existing B Pure organic cotton formula with all botanical infusions removed. The manufacturing relationship, the organic cotton sourcing, the pad construction, all remain unchanged. The reformulation scope is minimal.

Attribute	Specification
Core material	100% organic cotton cover, same as existing line
Fragrances	None, no lavender, no aloe, no essential oils
Dyes	None
Chlorine	None
Adhesive	Reinforced wing adhesive, addresses documented competitor weakness
Badge language	Unscented Sensitivity-Safe
Launch SKU	10-count mini pack at $1.25
Expansion SKU	20-count pack at $5.00, introduced after shelf velocity is established
Packaging color	Warm cream/ivory, visually distinct from all four existing B Pure SKUs

Packaging Strategy

The existing B Pure line uses color blocking as the primary SKU differentiator: purple for Regular, green for Super, pink for Overnight, teal for Day Liners. All four use cool-tone saturated palettes. A warm cream or ivory packaging for the Unscented line is visually distinct from every existing SKU while remaining within the B Pure brand family. It also communicates the product's core proposition visually: nothing added, nothing to react to.

Section 6: Campaign Strategy

Pay First. Earn the Moment.

The standard brand playbook waits for a product to go viral and then capitalizes on the moment, licensing the content, reposting the creator, issuing a PR statement. That model is reactive, often feels extractive to the creator community, and generates far less goodwill than the effort costs.

This campaign inverts that model. The strategy is to identify creators who have already organically engaged with B Pure, contract them before the unscented launch, and pay them fairly to introduce the new product to their audience. The brand moves first. The community responds.

Phase 1, Pre-Launch Creator Partnerships

- Identify 5–8 Black women creators who have previously reviewed B Pure or cover budget wellness, period care, or clean beauty content
- Paid contracts, not gifting, not affiliate codes, before the product launches
- Brief: authentic unboxing and review of B Pure Unscented, with emphasis on the sensitivity-safe positioning and the brand's responsiveness to consumer feedback
- Primary platforms: TikTok and YouTube Shorts
- Secondary platforms: Instagram Reels, Lemon8

The message embedded in the campaign is not just about the product. It is about Dollar Tree acknowledging what its consumers asked for and delivering it, and compensating the community that built the product's reputation in the first place.

Phase 2, Community Amplification

- Dollar Tree boosts creator content through owned social channels
- Actively engages in comments, responds directly to the consumers who requested unscented, by name where possible
- Expands to Dollar Tree-specific lifestyle creators (example: Nina Unrated) once initial creator wave establishes product credibility
- Tracks comment sentiment across creator content to capture additional consumer feedback for future line extensions

Why This Works

Paying micro-creators at the pre-viral stage costs a fraction of post-viral licensing fees and generates a level of authenticity that paid media advertising cannot replicate. The creators who built B Pure's reputation did so because they genuinely believed in the product. Bringing them into the launch as compensated partners, rather than capitalizing on their content after the fact, is both the right move and the strategically smart one.

Brands that engage authentically with their creator community and pay small creators fairly are a documented trend with demonstrated consumer goodwill. Few mass-market brands have initiated this model proactively rather than reactively. B Pure Unscented is an opportunity to be the first at this price point.

Section 7: The Business Case

Why This Is Low Risk for Dollar Tree

Factor	Assessment
Manufacturing	Extension of existing B Pure supplier relationship, no new vendor, minimal reformulation cost
Shelf risk	Cream/ivory packaging is immediately distinguishable from all four existing SKUs
Price architecture	$1.25 entry pack drives trial with zero price barrier; $5 pack drives margin and volume
Market timing	Launches directly into the trust vacuum created by Target's multicultural consumer exodus
Creator investment	Micro-creator contracts at pre-viral stage cost significantly less than post-viral licensing
Consumer signal	Demand is documented in the brand's own review threads, no research spend required to validate

Revenue Pathway

The $1.25 entry pack is not the revenue play. It is the trial mechanism. The strategic objective is to establish shelf velocity at the entry price point, demonstrate consumer pull-through, and use that data to justify the $5.00 larger pack rollout, which is where meaningful margin expansion occurs.

The organic feminine care category is growing at 4.23% annually in a $4.94B market. Dollar Tree's core consumer is already in that market and already purchasing B Pure. An unscented extension does not require capturing new market share. It requires deepening wallet share from an existing, loyal, high-indexing customer base.

Section 8: Recommended Next Steps

The following sequence is recommended to move this proposal from concept to launch:

- Consumer feedback study among current B Pure purchasers, validate unscented demand at scale. Estimated 60-day turnaround. Comment data from existing reviews provides directional confidence; a structured study provides the executive-level proof of concept needed to greenlight manufacturing.
- Brief the B Pure manufacturing partner on reformulation scope and cost. The core ask is simple: remove the lavender and aloe infusion, reinforce the wing adhesive. Establish cost delta from existing SKU.
- Identify and begin outreach to 5–8 creator partners. Prioritize creators who have already reviewed B Pure organically. Establish contract terms, content brief, and launch timeline.
- Set shelf velocity targets for the $1.25 pack before committing to $5 pack rollout. Define the performance threshold (units per store per week) that triggers the larger pack SKU introduction.
- Establish comment monitoring protocol across B Pure creator content to capture ongoing consumer feedback for future line extensions, overnight, pantyliners, or additional absorbency levels.

The product is low-risk. The consumer signal is already there. The market window is open now.

Sources & Methodology Notes

Primary Data Sources

- Numerator Shopper Insights, Dollar Tree visitor index by race/ethnicity
- PMC / National Institutes of Health, dollar store female shopper ratio (63.7%)
- Rutgers Business Review, dollar store core consumer demographic analysis
- Dollar Tree corporate investor materials, Family Dollar consumer segment data
- Collage Group Brand Trust Survey / Bloomberg Retail Report, Target favorability decline
- Harris Poll, consumer spending intent following DEI rollbacks
- Placer.ai Location Analytics, Target foot traffic decline
- Wall Street Journal Retail Tracking Data, Target comparable store sales
- Reuters / WSJ Market Data, Target stock price impact
- Coherent Market Insights, feminine hygiene market sizing and growth projections
- Ulta Beauty product reviews, Rael adhesive complaints
- Lemon8 (May 2024) and Reddit (March 2026), B Pure unscented demand documentation

Methodology Notes

- The 19.1% Black women customer share figure is a derived estimate, not a published statistic. It is calculated by multiplying the documented Black consumer visitor index ratio (2.21) by the U.S. Census Black population share (13.6%), then applying the documented dollar store female shopper rate (63.7%). The inputs are independently sourced; the output is a projection.
- Viral view counts for creator content are approximate figures sourced from Gemini Deep Research synthesis and should be treated as directional rather than precise.
- Consumer review paraphrases reflect the substance of documented feedback and are not direct quotations unless indicated.

B Pure Unscented, Accessible. Clean. No compromises.

